

Sanjay Iyer, MD, a recognized expert on movement disorders and Parkinson's disease, joined Memory Center Charlotte (MCC) in August 2019. The Memory Center is a non-profit physician-led practice unique because of its "Time & Attention" model. Dr. Iyer says, "With as much time per visit as I need and the right team around me, I truly believe I can 'listen' now... I believe in educating and empowering patients to own and manage their condition—active treatment." He joins Aris Chaconas, MD, Melissa Shepard, MD and founding physician Charles H. Edwards II, MD in providing patients and their caregivers with expert and compassionate care. According to Dr. Iyer, a multi-specialty approach is the best way to address diseases like Parkinson's: "at MCC, when my patients are experiencing memory or mood issues that are beyond my expertise, I simply knock on one of my partners' office doors to get their real-time input." Every patient and their family and/or caregivers are benefitting from Dr. Iyer's expert care and Memory Center Charlotte's unique approach. "I'm thankful to have joined the MCC team and I believe we will ultimately redefine the standard of care for patients and caregivers struggling with neurodegenerative diseases like Parkinson's or Alzheimer's."
